Note: this guide covers how to cite sources using the Canadian Journal of Political Science (CJPS) style. This guide is based on the more comprehensive CJPS Editorial Style Guidelines, available online: http://www.cpsa-acsp.ca/pdfs/Editorial%20Style%20Guidelines%202008.pdf

Students in the Department of Political Science on the St. John’s Campus are required to cite sources according to the CJPS style guidelines.

IN TEXT CITATIONS

CJPS does not use footnotes. Instead, embedded in-text (parenthetical or author-date) citations are employed, with a list of references at the end of the article following endnotes.

References to direct quotations, statistics, paraphrases or ideas borrowed from published work immediately follow the borrowed item: generally, the author’s last name, the year of publication and the relevant page number(s), depending on what information precedes the reference in the text. When citing page numbers from 100 and up, it is not necessary to repeat the first numeral in the last page referenced if it is the same as the first-page numeral cited; that is, 100-23, rather than 100-123.

- If the author’s name is in the text, it is omitted in the reference. If the reference is to a complete work, page numbers are not required. For example:

  According to Alan Cairns, “the electoral system has been an important factor in the evolution of the Canadian party system” (1968: 78).

  Alan C. Cairns’s study of the impact of the electoral system on political parties (1968) concludes....

  Electoral systems are not neutral (Cairns, 1968).

- If a reference involves two authors, both names should be included. For example,

  “...one cannot deny that Canada’s political parties are facing serious challenges to their presumed monopoly on the linkage function” (Tanguay and Gagnon, 1996: 3).

- If a reference has more than two authors, the first author’s last name should be followed by “et al.” For example,

  The effect of identification with governing parties on feelings of efficacy and trust has received attention (Lambert et al., 1986).

- If there is more than one reference in the manuscript to the same author(s) and the same year of publication, insert a, b, c, and so forth following the year. For example,

  ... (Lambert et al., 1986a). ...(Lambert et al., 1986b).

- When more than one source is to be included in a single citation, they are listed preferably in alphabetical order, separated by semi-colons. If the list is not exhaustive, but representative of the literature, the list of names and dates should be preceded by the phrase “for example.”

  Though the number of scholars who have addressed the question is small, the evidence is compelling (for example, Irvine, 1974; Irvine and Gold, 1980; Johnston, 1985; Meisel, 1967, 1975).
• Also, a brief phrase might be inserted within the parentheses, such as

... (but see Lambert et al., 1986a).

• The citation of an institution should precede the information itself. Also, references that lack an author’s name require the name of the institution that sponsored the reference. For an example of each,

Municipal data (City of St. Catharines, 1982: 2) indicate that property tax rates....

• References to court cases should contain sufficient information within the text to connect the reader with the item in the list of references at the end of the manuscript. For example,

The Supreme Court of Canada has also rejected the limitations of a “political question” doctrine that would put executive decisions in foreign policy and defence matters largely beyond judicial review (Operation Dismantle v. The Queen, 1985).

Of particular note is Justice Thurgood Marshall’s argument against capital punishment (U.S. Supreme Court, Gregg v. Georgia, 1976).

• References to sources from magazines or newspapers should approximate as much as possible conventional formats regarding other types of printed sources, including the author and the date. For example, in the case of an editorial,

As casualties mounted, Canadians began to question the wisdom of the mission (Toronto Star, 2007).

Similarly, in the case of an article written by a journalist,

Peter Donolo noted that neither Mr. Harper nor Mr. Dion connects with audiences at an emotional level (Taber, 2008).

REFERENCE LIST (BIBLIOGRAPHY)

Only references cited in the text are to be included in the list titled “References” at the end of your paper.

• The list should be in alphabetical order (Treat Mc as Mac. Surnames containing, for example, De, de la, or Von, should be listed under D or V.)

• Names should be in upper and lower case.

• When several references have the same author(s), the name should be repeated each time and the list should be in chronological order. If the list includes several references by the same author in the same year, distinguishing between or among them by adding a letter to the date of publication (for example, 2002a, 2002b, and so forth).

• In co-authored references, all authors’ full names must be included as they appear in the work being referenced.

• Generational references in names, such as Jr or II, should be listed following the given name and a comma. For example,

Rockefeller, John D., III, [the rest of the reference].
Here are some examples of how to cite different types of material in your reference list:

BOOKS

CHAPTER/ARTICLE IN AN EDITED BOOK

ARTICLES

JOURNAL ARTICLE

MAGAZINE OR NEWSPAPER ARTICLES

GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS

COURT REPORTS

CONFERENCE PAPER

OCCASIONAL PAPER SERIES

THESIS OR DISSERTATION

SOURCES ON THE INTERNET

Cite sources on the Internet as closely as possible to conventional formats noted above. For example, consult the printed version that would be referenced as:

Or consult the electronic version that would be referenced as:

Note that in the reference to the electronic document, the date of the print version of the source and the date of an author’s access to the electronic source are both listed in reference to the electronic version.

If an Internet-based source lacks an author (institutional or human), a publisher or a date of printed publication, use the file name, the date the site was last revised or the date you accessed the site. For the latter case,

ENDNOTES

If endnotes are used at all in a manuscript, they should contain only brief and necessary explanatory information.

Endnotes should be listed as “Endnotes” following the text and preceding the list of references.
